Zooming into Focus

Dr. Ben Swartzman,
Principal Investigator
Research Study 1

“This study is based on our study from the previous RRTC, a parent mentorship project, where we matched parents of employed adults with IDD to parents of unemployed adults with IDD. So originally, our goal was to create a parent intervention and then through our work in that project, we realized a lot of what we were doing through parent mentorship would be great to include peer mentorship with people with IDD and using their own lived experience to be mentors for adults that are looking for jobs or working directly with the adults with IDD and so... we wanted to combine parent and peer mentorship into one intervention so we’re rolling that out in this next round of the research.”
